Marine Liability

LIABILITY COVER FROM SHIP TO SHORE

PROTECT AGAINST THE LIABILITY

A towed oil barge is involved in a collision causing a large oil spill; a ship sinks in shallow waters disrupting marine traffic and needs to be removed; a chemical explosion in a sea port; a contractor falls and injures himself on board a vessel.

Whether impacting marine vessels directly or related to onshore activities, marine liability is a continually evolving risk that has the potential to generate volatile and catastrophic exposures.

Protect the exposure

Providing broad coverage for marine liability perils faced by the maritime industry, Hiscox Marine Liability insures companies of all sizes for both conventional and more specialised marine liability risks.

With an appetite to look at more complicated and tougher risks, as well as the more conventional, our experienced and technically knowledgeable team are recognised in the Lloyd's market as leaders in their field.

Our appetite

Offering a line size of up to $50m, we underwrite on a primary or excess basis for all types of marine liability risks anywhere in the world, with a particular focus on the US.
